WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

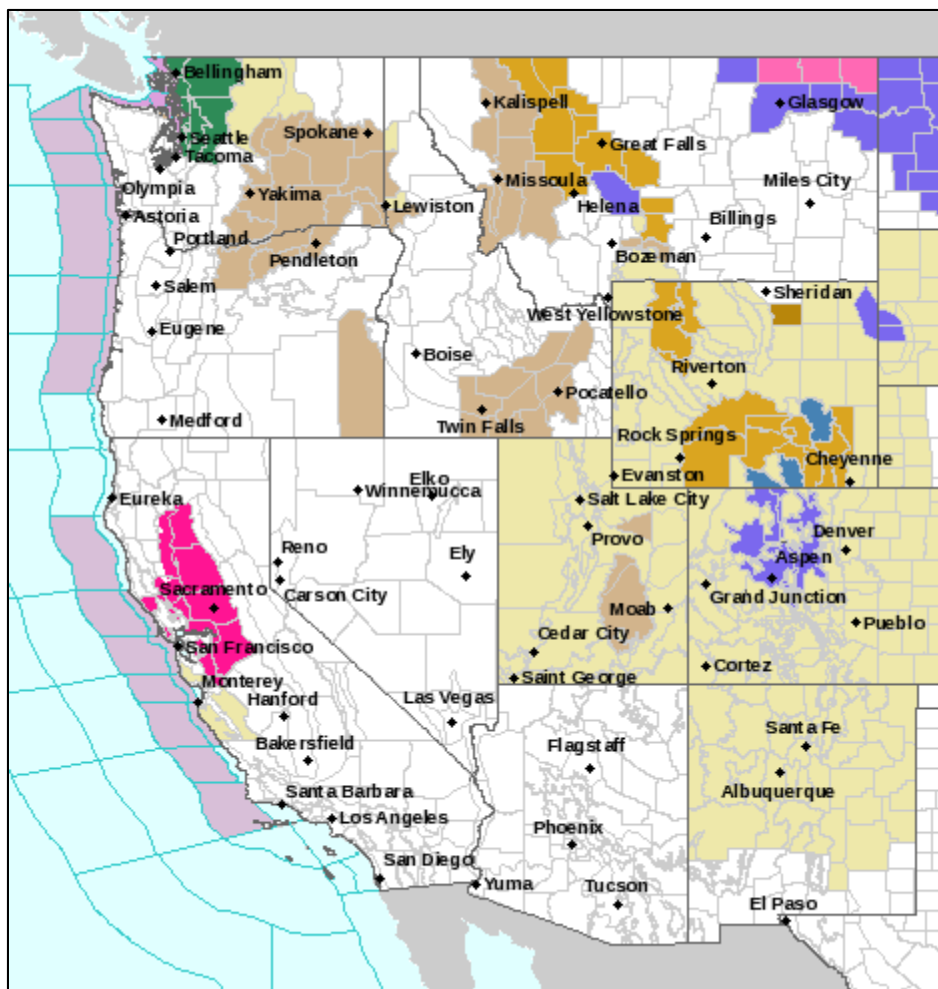

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

- Next periods of significant northerly winds expected tonight and Saturday then perhaps next Tuesday/Wednesday.
- High pressure will still dominate the weather pattern next 6 days with a few minor weather systems occasionally weakening the high as they pass by to the north.
- Winds will continue to be northerly for Northern California overall for the next 6 days, but in the wake of those minor weather systems, speeds will increase for a period. Confidence is reasonably high tonight and Saturday will have those stronger northerly winds with gusts 25-35 mph in the favored areas.
- Low afternoon relative humidity (RH) with mostly moderate overnight recoveries will persist west of the Cascade-Sierra crest with lowest afternoon RHs there generally 12-20%, possibly lower when the northerly winds are stronger. Overnight RH recoveries will generally be 50% or higher, but on the breezier north wind days, they may be only 20-35% where stronger winds persist overnight.
- Temperatures will generally be 5-12 degrees above seasonal normals with the warmest inland areas lower 80s for the next few days before cooling into the upper 70s.
- No precipitation is expected, even in the far northern areas when the weather systems pass by.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

- Sunny, warm, and dry weather is expected to continue through Saturday. Local offshore winds will be possible this morning across Los Angeles and Ventura counties as well as the Cajon Pass. All winds should become light today. A minor increase in offshore winds may briefly develop Sunday morning. Cooler and more humid weather looks to arrive next Monday.
- Temperatures will drop into the upper 70s to lower 80s in the valleys and a return of marine layer stratus should occur by Monday.
- Northeast winds of 10-20 mph with gusts to 30 mph will be possible in portions of Southern California this morning. Expect light northeast winds of 5-10 mph tonight. A bit stronger winds may develop for a few hours Sunday morning.
- Minimum RH dropping into the 8-15% range across most areas away from the immediate coast. Poor RH recovery can be expected across Southern California outside the valley floors this evening. Higher RH will overspread the region next Monday and Tuesday.
- No precipitation is expected the next two weeks.
